this agenda belongs to _____ Hallo !

This would be my research journal about all the things I learned during this Graphic Design project about the Norwegian Welfare State while exchanging here in KHiO.

In this journal you will only find my personal opinion regarding the different experiences I had here. This is not critical, just some stories about my life as a short term foreigner. Into the Velferdsstat Jungle.

Velferdsstaten

l'État-providence

week 14

Velferdsstat (ty. Wohlfahrtsstaat) er betegnelsen på en stat som, i tillegg til å sørge for sine borgeres sikkerhet, yter dem en rekke grunnleggende goder som for eksempel støtte til utdanning, trygder ved sykdom eller fattigdom og pensjon. Hvor omfattende velferdsstaten er, varierer fra stat til stat men de fleste industrialiserte land kan sies å være velferdsstater i en eller annen form. En motsats til velferdsstaten er nattvekterstaten.

L'État-providence (ou État-social en Suisse¹) est une forme adoptée par certains États qui se dotent de larges compétences réglementaires, économiques et sociales en vue d'assurer une panoplie plus ou moins étendue de fonctions sociales au bénéfice de leurs citoyens. Cette forme d'État s'affranchit de la conception libérale d'un État limité à des fonctions d'ordre public et de sécurité.

At this point I've been researching a lot. But as a foreigner it's kind of hard to talk about the Welfare system in Norway without feeling a bit wrong. I haven't lived it, and even if I know how it works now, I don't know how is it to experience it as a real Norwegian. Therefore from this point, I will research about the condition of the foreigners. Like me.

ID - NUMBER*

In Norway, identification numbers is used to identity inhabitants. Many public and private sector organisations require to have a Norwegian identification number in order to gain access to their services. Once you have it, you keep it for your whole life.

D - NUMBER

It's a temporary identification number which can be assigned to foreign persons who'll generally be resident in Norway for less than six months.

audience primary / secondary : The first audience would be exchange students who would want to learn something through my experience. The second audience on a larger scale would be every foreigner that would come to Norway.

Now that I understand more how the system is working in a general way, I looked for more personal point of views, and asked few of my Norwegian friends about it.

Adélie : Globally, what do you think about the Norwegian Velferdsstaten ?

Sofie : I think the Norwegian velferdss-tat is a great thing, and I know it's not feasible to achieve in every other country, but I think it could be at least partially achieved in a lot of industrial countries. It's all about taxes, and the state owning the country's resources and that the profit off those benefitting the citizens and not big corporations owned by a few fat cats. If you reduce the influence of capitalism on society and let the state invest in the population's future it can be done. An investment in universal education and healthcare are especially important.

A : Do you feel helped enough by the state ? And if not, what would you change ?

S : The state has never let me down, and I never fear that I will find myself in any real danger concerning education, health, or housing. I think large corporations could be restricted further.

A : Do you sometimes compare the situation in Norway to other countries ? Like «this is better dealt with somewhere else» ?

S : The only think that comes to mind is how dental care is state funded in the UK, whereas here it's only partially funded.

Adélie : Globally, what do you think about the Norwegian Velferdsstaten ?

Tora : Globally I think the model is great in Norway because it is trying to look after people and I personally believe in socialism. I also recognize that Norway is a very rich country and we have not been independent for that long so it has been possible to build this model quite quickly.

A : Do you feel helped enough by the state ? And if not, what would you change ?

T : I feel helped in a lot of ways but I still think there are things that could be better. I feel for example particularly when it comes to housing that the country is catering a lot to the kind of nuclear family and as a single, almost thirty year old artist I'm not really sure what I'll do about living in the near future.

A : Do you sometimes compare the situation in Norway to other countries ? Like «this is better dealt with somewhere else» ?

T : And I think this leads into 3 - some other countries like Sweden have much better renting opportunities where the state has a portion of the market and you can get nice rent controlled apartments (and you don't end up like us paying loads to a landlord who won't even fix the bathroom door...)

Adélie : Globally, what do you think about the Norwegian Velferdsstaten ?

Kristian : I think the velferdsstaten Norway works very well. I think most of the people living in Norway takes it all for granted. Because when you start to think about it and compare with other countries.. we are really lucky.

A : Do you feel helped enough by the state ? And if not, what would you change ?

K : Yes, we have free education, health and care, support if you are not able to work etc.

A : Do you sometimes compare the situation in Norway to other countries ? Like «this is better dealt with somewhere else» ?

K : No, not really. I happy where I am.

It was not an easy task trying to understand how a whole system's working within a month. I haven't entirely cracked the Velferdstat code, because I think it takes more than many Google reasearch to figure it out. You have to live it to fully understand it's richness and it's flaws.

However, by my own experience and comparing it to where I come from, I would say that as far as I'm concerned, Norway is a very well organized country. Everything seems made to facilitate people's life, at least as an exchange student, I've never felt lost or on the side. In France, administrative matters are way more different, nothing ever feel that simple and you always end up waiting a lot, or being confused. I imagine that no system is perfect, but it is true that other countries have a lot to learn from Norway.
